The German painter and graphic artist is known for his stylistic diversity and penchant for realism. His time as a volunteer in the First World War had a significant influence on his painting style, resulting in realistic drawings that reflected the brutality of the First World War. After his return, he began studying at the Academy of Fine Arts in Dresden, where he co-founded the Dresden Secession in 1919. He also maintained a lively dialogue with the Dadaists in Berlin and produced moving pictures and Dada dolls. He returned to Dresden via Düsseldorf and Berlin, where he took up a professorship at the academy. When he was one of the first to lose his professorship at the hands of the National Socialists in 1933, he decided to emigrate and retired to Hemmenhofen on Lake Constance. After the end of the Second World War, he returned to his expressionist style of painting, which he had suppressed during his internal emigration. Otto Dix is known as a pioneer of New Objectivity.
